

OUTLINE OF TOPICS

	PAGE
1. The definition and scope of philosophy	351
1a. The relation of philosophy to theology or religion
1b. The relation of philosophy to mathematics	352
1c. The relation of philosophy to experimental or empirical science
1d. The relation of philosophy to myth, poetry, and history	353
2. The divisions of philosophy
2a. The distinction between theoretic or speculative and practical or moral philosophy: the distinction between natural and civil philosophy
2b. The branches of speculative philosophy: the divisions of natural philosophy
2c. The nature and branches of practical or moral philosophy: economics, ethics, politics, jurisprudence; poetics or the theory of art	354
3. The method of philosophy
3a. The foundations of philosophy in experience and common sense
3b. The philosopher's appeal to first principles and to definitions	355
3c. The processes of philosophical thought: induction, intuition, definition, demonstration, reasoning, analysis, and synthesis
3d. The methodological reformation of philosophy	356
4. The uses of philosophy: diverse conceptions of its aim, function, and value
4a. The philosophic mode of life: contemplation and happiness
4b. Philosophy as a moral discipline: the consolation of philosophy
4c. The social role of philosophy: the philosopher and the statesman; the philosopher king	357
5. The character and training of the philosopher: the difficulty of being a philosopher
6. Praise and dispraise of the philosopher and his work	358
6a. The philosopher as a man of science or wisdom: the love and search for truth
6b. The philosopher and the man of opinion: sophistry and dogmatism, idle disputation, perpetual controversy
6c. The philosopher as a man of reason: the limits of reason; its supplementation by experience or faith	359
6d. The philosopher as a man of theory or vision: neglect of the practical; withdrawal from the affairs of men and the marketplace
7. Observations on the history of philosophy: the lives of the philosophers in relation to their thought	360