

OUTLINE OF TOPICS

- | | |
|--|------|
| 1. The nature of human society | |
| 1 a. Comparison of human and animal gregariousness: human and animal societies | |
| 1b. Comparison of the family and the state in origin, structure, and government | |
| 1c. Associations intermediate between the family and the state: the village or tribal community; civil society as the stage between family and state | |
| 1d. Social groups other than the family or the state: religious, charitable, educational, and economic organizations; the corporation | |
| | 840 |
| 2. The general theory of the state | |
| 2a. Definitions of the state or political community: its form and purpose | |
| (1) Comparison of the state and the soul: the conception of the state as a living organism; the body politic | |
| (2) The state as a corporate person | 841 |
| (3) The progressive realization of the state as the process of history: the state as the divine idea as it exists on earth; the national spirit | |
| | PAGE |
| 2b. The state as a part or the whole of society | 841 |
| 2c. The source or principle of the state's sovereignty: the sovereignty of the prince; the sovereignty of the people | |
| 2d. The economic aspect of the state: differentiation of states according to their economic systems | |
| 2e. The political structure of the state: its determination by the form of government | 842 |
| 2f. The primacy of the state or the human person: the welfare of the state and the happiness of its members | |
| 2g. Church and state: the relation of the city of God to the city of man | 843 |
| 3. The origin, preservation, and dissolution of the state | 844 |
| 3a. The development of the state from other communities | |
| 3b. The state as natural or conventional or both | |
| (1) Man as by nature a political animal: the human need for civil society | |
| (2) Natural law and the formation of the state | 845 |
| 3c. The condition of man in the state of nature and in the state of civil society: the state of war in relation to the state of nature | |
| 3d. The social contract as the origin of civil society or the state: universal consent as the basis of the constitution or government of the state | |
| 3e. Love and justice as the bond of men in states: friendship and patriotism | 846 |
| 3f. Fear and dependence as the cause of social cohesion: protection and security | |
| 3g'. The identity and continuity of a state: the dissolution of the body politic or civil society | 847 |
| 4. The physical foundations of society: the geographical and biological conditions of the state | |
| 4a. The territorial extent of the state: its importance relative to different forms of government | |
| 4b. The influence of climate and geography on political institutions and political economy | |
| 4c. The size, diversity, and distribution of populations: the causes and effects of their increase or decrease | 848 |
| 5. The social structure or stratification of the state | |

5a. The political distinction between ruling and subject classes, and between citizens and denizens
5b. The family as a member of the state: its autonomy and its subordination	849
5c. The classes or sub-groups arising from the division of labor or distinctions of birth: the social hierarchy
5d. The conflict of classes within the state	850
(1) The opposition of social groups: the treatment of national, racial, and religious minorities
(2) The clash of economic interests and political factions: the class war
5e. The classless society	851
	PAGE
6. The ideal or best state: the contrast between the ideal state and the best that is historically real or practicable	851
6a. The political institutions of the ideal state
6b. The social and economic arrangements of the ideal state
7. Factors affecting the quality of states	852
7a. Wealth and political welfare
7b. The importance of the arts and sciences in political life
7c. The state's concern with religion and morals: the cultivation of the virtues
7d. The educational task of the state: the trained intelligence of the citizens	853
8. The offices of state: the statesman, king, or prince	854
8a. The duties of public office and the responsibilities of office holders: the relation of the statesman or king to the people he represents or rules
8b. The qualities or virtues necessary for the good statesman or king
8c. The education or training of the statesman or prince	856
8d. Statecraft: the art or science of governing; political prudence
(1) The employment of the military arts
(2) The occasions and uses of rhetoric	857
(3) The role or function of experts in the service of the state
8e. The advantages and disadvantages of participation in political life
9. The relation of states to one another	858
9a. Commerce and trade between states: commercial rivalries and trade agreements; free trade and tariffs
9b. Social and cultural barriers between states: the antagonism of diverse customs and ideas
9c. Honor and justice among states	859
9d. The sovereignty of independent states: the distinction between the sovereignty of the state at home and abroad; internal and external sovereignty
9e. War and peace between states	860
(1) The military problem of the state: preparation for conquest or defense
(2) Treaties between states: alliances, leagues, confederacies, or hegemonies
9f. Colonization and imperialism: the economic and political factors in empire	861
10. Historic formations of the state: the rise and decline of different types of states
10a. The city-state
10b. The imperial state	862
10c. The feudal state
10d. The national state
10e. The federal state: confederacies and federal unions
10f. The ideal of a world state	