

OUTLINE OF TOPICS

	PAGE
1. Diverse conceptions of virtue	985
1a. The relation between knowledge and virtue	g86
1b. The unity of virtue and the plurality of virtues
1c. The doctrine of virtue as a mean between the extremes of vice	987
1d. Virtue as an intrinsic good: its relation to happiness
1e. The distinction between virtue and continence: the consequences of the theory of virtue as habit	988
2. The classification of the virtues: the correlative vices
2a. The division of virtues according to the parts or powers of the soul: the distinction between moral and intellectual virtue; the theory of the cardinal virtues
(1) Enumeration and description of the moral virtues
(2) Enumeration and description of the intellectual virtues
2b. The distinction between natural and supernatural virtues	989
2c. The appearances of virtue: imperfect or conditional virtues; the counterfeits of virtue; natural or temperamental dispositions which simulate virtue
3. The order and connection of the virtues
3a. The equality and inequality of the virtues: the hierarchy of virtue and the degrees of vice
3b. The independence or interdependence of the virtues
4. The natural causes or conditions of virtue	990
4a. Natural endowments: temperamental dispositions toward virtue or vice; the seeds or nurseries of virtue
4b. The role of teaching in the spheres of moral and intellectual virtue
4c. Training or practice as cause of virtue or vice: the process of habit formation	991
4d. The role of the family and the state in the development of moral virtue
(1) The influence of parental authority on the formation of character
(2) The moral use of rewards and punishments: the role of precept and counsel, praise and blame	992
(3) The guidance of laws and customs: the limits of positive law with respect to commanding virtue and prohibiting vice
(4) The influence on moral character of poetry, music, and other arts: the guidance of history and example	993

	PAGE
4e. The moral quality of human acts	993
(1) The distinction between human or moral acts and the nonvoluntary or reflex acts of a man
(2) The criteria of goodness and evil in human acts	994
(3) Circumstances as affecting the morality of human acts
5. Psychological factors in the formation of moral virtue	995
5a. The emotions and pleasure and pain as the matter of virtue: the role of desire or appetite
5b. Deliberation and judgment in the formation of virtue: the role of reason
5c. Intention and choice as conditions of virtue: the role of will	996
6. Virtue in relation to other moral goods or principles
6a. Duty and virtue
6b. The relation of virtue to pleasure
6c. The relation of virtue to wealth	997
6d. Virtue and honor	998
6e. Virtue in relation to friendship and love
7. The role of virtue in political theory	999
7a. The cultivation of virtue as an end of government and the state
7b. Civic virtue: the virtue of the good citizen compared with the virtue of the good man
7c. The aristocratic principle: virtue as a condition of citizenship or public office	1000
7d. The virtues which constitute the good or successful ruler: the vices associated with the possession of power
8. The religious aspects of virtue and vice	1002
8a. The moral consequences of original sin
8b. The influence of religion on moral character: the indispensability of divine grace for the acquisition of natural virtue by fallen man
8c. The divine reward of virtue and punishment of vice: here and hereafter	1003
8d. The theory of the theological virtues	1004
f 1) Faith and disbelief
(2) Hope and despair	1005
(3) Charity and the disorder of love
8e. The infused virtues and the moral and intellectual gifts	1006
8f. The qualities which flow from charity: humility, mercy, chastity, obedience
8g. The vows and practices of the monastic life in relation to virtue	1007
9. The advance or decline of human morality	